Hope for the Springs.

Shaw has a force of men at work on the Springs and they are sinking in the solid rock in search of water. At a depth of 18 inches below the surface they have found hot water that is not reduced by boiling, and the search will be continued. With the machinery Shaw has he can pump 1,800 gallons an hour.

It is thought by some that the earthquake opened a new reservoir which, when filled will cause the water to back up and find a vent where it did before.

Swift, who knows the moods of the springs, thinks that in a month or so the flow will be resumed. There is also considerable talk of sinking an artesian well. Shaw is making a game fight for the water, and if energy will win he will soon be on his feet again.

Want's the Capitol.

The Walker Lake Bulletin wants the Capitol and all the public buildings moved to Hawthorne on the ground that it is the only place in the State not disturbed by the earthquake. Mr. Campbell feels a good deal as Richelieu did when the King in a crisis remarked: "The ground on which he stands alone escapes the earthquake."

This matter will be fully considered Jack.

Rye as a Grazing Plant.

A Colorado farmer who has tried it, is of the opinion that the great grazing plant of the future will be rye. Says he:

"It should be sown in the month of August, when it will afford a very good bite of fresh feed for calves through the Winter and early Spring, and if never allowed to mature or ripen will grow on from irrigation. It is an excellent grass food for milk cows."

A Progressive Pupil.

Monaco, the artist, who did such good work here in crayon pictures, gave lessons to several young ladies. Among others was Miss Nellie Musgrove, who has just finished a crayon picture of her mother. The work of the pupil is in every respect the equal of her teacher.

GOLD CHICKEN.

Some Rare Samples of the Article.

"Talk about check" said a man in front of the Sheriff's office yesterday, "there used to be a man, a neighbor of mine, who stole over a mile of my fence. One day I watched him with a spy glass until I had him dead to rights and the next morning I concluded to go over and make a demand on him. Just as I was getting ready he comes up the walk and presented me with a bill of $300 for fence repairing. I told him I'd think it over and that's the last we ever talked over the matter."

"Pretty clear case of gall, but not any worse than a game played on me," put in a small man on a dry goods box. "Last Fall I was about to leave town for a spell, when a neighbor asked for the use of my stable to store a carriage in. I consented and he used it all Winter. In the Spring I came back and found that he had put my carriage out and put his in. My carriage was ruined and he never even thanked me for the accommodation."

"That ain't as bad as the time I sold an old fellow up the creek a fat mule for $40. He never paid me a cent, but one day the mule fell down an old prospect shaft I had dug, and he made me pay him $80 for the accident. The mule would have died in another week but I had to pungle or have a law suit."

"Speaking of gall" said a typo from the State Printing Office, "years ago I was in Natchez and the night was so hot a lot of the printers went down on the river and bunked on a raft. One man who didn't know the ways of the river, dove in for a bath. Of course we knew he was a good short as soon as he struck the water. The undertow sucked him down and we didn't see any more of him. We took his clothes, watch, six shooter and $26 in money he had won off four bits, playing faro."

"We pawed his effects and got $20 more and next day while we were drinking the money up he stalked in on us with an old rancher's clothes on. He had been washed ashore a few miles down and some old coon had loaned him some togs to walk home in. We threw a hot scotch into him and when he found out where we got the money he had the gall to damn us for it."

STEWART'S EARTHQUAKE INDICATOR.

How it was Affected by Local Disturbances.

Years ago Professor Stewart, the geologist, kept a saloon in San Jose. He was at that time quite an expert in science, and invented an instrument for recording earthquake shocks. It consisted of a sensitive rod with a fine-pointed pencil at either end, which responded to the slightest tremor of the earth and recorded the vibration on paper. Stewart rigged this up in his saloon, and it was a great object of interest.

The San Jose Mercury published something every day about the seismometer, as it was called, and noted the fact that the vibrations increased in strength and frequency as the temperature increased. The warmer the day the more the shock. The instrument substantiated Stewart's theory that there was a slight vibration of the earth every hour of the day.

Just as the scientific world was taking a great interest in this matter someone discovered that the vibrations were caused by an old sow scratching her back against the building under which she went for a snooze in the heat of the day.

The day this discovery was made by some small boys a lecture on the seismometer and earthquakes in general was advertised, but it did not come off, and the whole Coast had a good laugh over the affair.

Bad Result of a Practical Joke.

While Dr. G. H. Thoma was at Johannes' store yesterday some one put off some firecrackers to scare a drunken man. Col. W. O. Mills' horse and buggy was standing close to a team in front of the store at the time and became frightened by the noise. Dr. Thoma ran out and took Mills' horse by the head to stop him, when the team, starting a little, the wheels of the vehicle they were attached to struck Dr. Thoma across his knees and threw him under the buggy, which passed over his head. His left ear was cut and his right knee hurt, producing a swelling. He was also injured on the front bone of the left knee. It is extremely fortunate that he was not hurt worse, and he thanks his lucky star that he is able to walk.—Sentinel.

Kissane Must Disgorge.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 8.—General Darr, in a conversation with the Bee correspondent, said that he had completed arrangements for a suit against Wm. Kissane, otherwise known as W. K. Rogers, of Sonoma county. He said that the statement that the claim of the Chemical Bank was outlawed is all nonsense. The best and fullest advice had been taken before the proceedings were commenced, and no shadow of a doubt remains but that they would recover the full amount of Kissane's indebtedness to the bank—plus the interest and all expenses. Gen. Darr added that he was giving the matter his fullest attention.

A Child Falls in a Well.

The Reveille says little Nina Lund, of Austin, while playing with some other children, fell head foremost into a well forty feet deep. Her foot became entangled in the rope and she caught hold of the bucket, which descended with her and doubtless saved her life, as she held on to it in the water, which was ten feet deep, until extricated. The child sustained only a slight cut on the head, and seemed none the worse for her perilous fall and cold bath.

All in the Family.

There is great fun in a little Georgia town called Jonesborough. A widower named Halmey had five sons. A widow named Starns had five daughters. One by one the Halmey boys moved and married the Starns girls, against the father's protest. A few days ago the last couple eloped and old man Halmey then went over and married the Starns widow. General congratulations and family reunion all round.

Increased Flow from Springs.

Mr. Gardner, foreman of the stock yards, reports the flow of his springs increased five times in volume since the earthquake. Mr. Gilbert's springs in the Southwest portion of the city flowed hot water several hours after the shock and then gradually became cold. An artesian well belonging to the writer increased in flow and became considerably colder.
